Description:

Research and Assessment Unit (RAU) projects are undertaken to assess existing library programs and services, to investigate user needs and future directions, and to assist Library decision-makers in developing superior information services for the Cornell community. RAU strives for neutrality in the collection and analysis of data and in reporting its findings. Inherent in all research projects are contingencies and circumstances that call for caution when interpreting the data. Specific information about the known limitations of the study is included in the project report. RAU staff are happy to discuss interpretation of data in the reports they produce.
